SYLVIA CHANT (1997)

WOMEN-HEADED HOUSEHOLDS: DIVERSITY AND DYNAMICS IN THE DEVELOPING WORLD

Houndmills, Basingstoke: Macmillan/ New York: St Martins.

Latin American Research Review

‘Chant’s methodological sophistication shines in her discussion of the benefits and potential pitfalls of comparative research and its relevance for theorisation… Chant’s work is the most comprehensive cross-cultural research to date on women-headed households.’

European Journal of Development Research

‘Sylvia Chant’s meticulously researched analysis of women-headed households brings into focus important issues for policy and research in the developing, as well as in the (post-)industrialised world… this volume provides an excellent review of a wide selection of international research and debates on female-headed households which can serve as a material basis for a wide-ranging analysis of discourse, meaning and reality’.

Bulletin of Latin American Research

‘This comprehensive and systematic summary of research on women-headed households combined with case studies of households formation and maintenance, is an excellent place to start any research or policy-making venture on this topic’.

Bibliographie Critique

‘..c’est un outil utile à tout démographe, sociologue ou anthropologue travaillant sur les mutations actuelles de la famille, en particulier dans les pays en voie de développement. De plus, le lecteur trouvera une bibliographie conséquente ainsi qu’un index for utile’.

Population Studies

‘..rich fragments of biography contain positive accounts of women’s survivorship, as well as victimisation… The double standards of sexual morality and the asymmetrical expectations of men and women as marriage partners may not be universal, but they are well illustrated in the account presented here'.
